

by most of the States in the Union, that are now pursuing similar operations with the utmost zeal and energy, they cannot believe that it would comport with the dignity and interests of the State to repeal, at this stage of the progress of a great work near the eve of its completion, the act of December session, 1834, in reference to a new map and a geological survey of the State.

All which is respectfully submitted,

J. BOZMAN KERR,
From the Majority of the Select Committee.
